Examines how industry can be transformed through sustainability, innovation, digitalization, and inclusive policy to build a resilient and equitable global economic future.

The Future of Industrialization asks, how can industrial development evolve within planetary boundaries? Bringing together heads of state, global policymakers, UN leaders, CEOs, and leading scholars, this volume sets out a bold and forward-looking agenda for sustainable, inclusive, and innovation-led industrial transformation in the 21st century.

Readership

The book is positioned to become a flagship reference for (1) policymakers shaping socio-economic and environmental challenges, (2) institutions navigating the green and digital transitions, (3) private-sector actors investing in sustainable industry, and (4) universities and think tanks teaching global development policy.

About the Author(s) / Editor(s)

Gerd Müller is Director General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and former Federal Minister for Economic Cooperation and Development. Müller stands for fair globalization, fair global value chains and a new global deal for sustainable industrialization and job creation, one that mobilizes significant investments in a resilient future for the Global South. Central to this is the question of how to decouple necessary economic growth and universal access to energy from rising emissions. He emphasizes that the potential for solutions to development challenges and technological leapfrogging is unprecedented and must be a shared global priority.
