Analyses the role of global elite networks in shaping Ukraine's EU-IMF deal during the Euromaidan period, focusing on the intersections between corporate, political and institutional actors, and exploring how these networks influenced key outcomes like GM agriculture, fracking and regime change, offering a new perspective on power dynamics in international relations

"Stephanie Hale's groundbreaking study reveals how transnational elite networks—of foundations, think tanks, corporations, and gatekeepers—orchestrated Ukraine's fateful pivot to the West, driving Euromaidan, neoliberal reforms and NATO alignment while sidelining democratic sovereignty. A meticulous exposé, it lays bare the hidden power brokers behind the 2014 crisis and the continuing war. Essential reading for anyone seeking to understand Ukraine not as a clash of nations, but as a laboratory of global elite engineering." —Professor Inderjeet Parmar, author of Foundations of the American Century

This book provides a great backstory of what is happening in Ukraine. It contextualises Ukraine's 2014 EU-IMF aid deal and provides up to date empirical information and analysis through the lens of a socially connected global elite network. It contributes to the understanding of how power operates in international politics.
