Explores how nationalist projects in the modern Mediterranean absorbed, reshaped or erased shared intercultural identities, offering five historical case studies from Italy, Greece, Turkey, Lebanon and Libya

This book investigates how pre-nationalist ties between Mediterranean cultures have been inherited, repurposed and rejected by nationalist movements from 1815 until the present day. The book uses five case studies of regional nation-states to explore this theme of 'transnational nationalism': Italy, Greece, Turkey, Lebanon and Libya.

Readership

The readers of this book fall into four categories: First, scholars of Mediterranean studies, nationalism, international relations and state-specific history and society. Second, students of those same topics, both in terms of assigned reading and reference material. Third, policy practitioners looking for historical context on problems they are concerned with. Fourth, members of the general public interested in the history of and contemporary issues facing the Mediterranean region.

Key selling points

Argues for a new and more holistic view of the Mediterranean's nationalist past

Uses innovative case-studies approach instead of single-nation or comparative models

Examines colonial and post-colonial periods and coloniser and colonised perspectives

Engages current events related to migration, regional politics and economic forces
