Explores how global contemporary art has shifted from 1990s globalization to today's fractured landscapes of rootedness, using documenta fifteen to trace changing artistic solidarities, politics, and infrastructures.

This book examines documenta fifteen (2022) as a turning point in global art politics, from ruangrupa's Indonesian lumbung model to Palestinian cultural infrastructures. It traces how debates over collectivity, decolonization, and memory politics reveal the contradictions of globalization, financialization, and contemporary art's search for rootedness.

Readership

For artists, curators, scholars, and students interested in contemporary art, politics, global exhibitions, and how infrastructures of solidarity, militancy, and collectivism from the 1970s and 1990s have been transformed in today's de-globalizing art world.

Key selling points

Explores documenta fifteen as a turning point in global art politics

Analyzes contemporary art infrastructures through lenses of NGOization and decolonial aesthetics

Connects art world debates to wider shifts in globalization, financialization, and memory politics

Offers original insights for curators, scholars, and arts audiences on the contradictions of contemporary collectivity
