Key selling points

A book oriented through a primary market of academics, scholars, instructors and students (both undergraduate, graduate and doctorate)

The main disciplines of interest for this book are geography, economics, sociology, demography, ecology, planning and so on

A secondary market for this book includes professionals, policy-makers and practitioners operating at vastly different government scales, from global to local, as well as informed citizens interested in well-being and in the debate 'beyond the GDP', stakeholders of any policy process, but also planners, architects and developers.

The strength of this book is the multidisciplinary approach mixing theoretical issues with practical applications/examples/exercises.
